NO WORRIES ABOUT WHO IS NEXT, OR HOT TOWELS—Terre Haute Barbers' Union invades the bosky dells of Deming Park, and enjoys an annual outing with games and contests, and beauty shows, and a big family dinner for a climax.

UNIQUE REUNION AT ROSEDALE—Once a year Rosedale and former Rosedale folks hold a reunion. It is called the Old Chums reunion, and they come from miles around. One this year was from Hawaii and another from Tombstone, Ariz. This has been going on since 1940.

AT THE SUMMER MEETING of the Boy Scout Mothers Club, Troop 17, were, from left, seated: Miss Nelle Dunkin, Miss Flora Hughes; standing, Mrs. H. W. Ford, Mrs. Mary McIntosh, Mrs. June Smith and Mrs. Ruth Coverstone.

KOREAN WAR BUDDIES get together again at Naval Ordnance Plant in Indianapolis. MP is Sgt. William T. Kuykendall, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. William Kuykendall of 2803 South Fifth street. Man in jeep is S/Sgt. Thomas P. Reffner of Detroit. They saw action together in Korea as members of the First U.S. Marine Division.

SIXTY-FIVE MEMBERS OF THE CRISS FAMILY gathered at the annual family reunion Sunday at Good Times oven at Deming Park. Judge Herbert E. Criss, center second row, is shepherd for this particular branch of the Crisses who are numerous in the Wabash Valley. Judge Criss said grace at the big family dinner, and then carved the watermelons.

Pioneer Resident Recalls Days of City's Infancy

Trib-Star, June 24 1916

By EULETA SLOVER

William Criss, 82-year-old resident of R. R. 4, has a vivid recollection of life in and about Terre Haute, dating from the colorful river-boat days of the 1870's and the Wabash and Erie Canal, a portion of whose abandoned ditch is a historical focal point of the Elks Fort Harrison Country Club grounds, to thepresentday.

Mr. Criss, retired farmer and stock broker, came to Terre Haute at a very early age from his birthplace in Fairbanks, Ind. This elderly man of very keen memory, recalled in a personal interview that he saw his first grocery store when he came to the city.

His parents, William D. and Susan Jane Jewell Criss, now deceased, were in the habit of trading their farm wares to the travelling huckster who also did shopping chores for them when he returned to the city. Purchases such as calico for garments, and shoes on rare occasions would be delivered on his next trip around.

Early Impressions.

When asked for his first impressions of Terre Haute, Mr. Criss told of journeying by wagon from Fairbanks to what was then known as Pike's Peak, now the junction of First street and the Prairieton road.

The streets were a sea of mud, he recalled, and the wagons marred down several times on the trip up to Main street, now known as Wabash avenue. He recalled brick yards located at First and Park streets. In those days the mud was hauled by wagon from the river bottoms and the brick molds dried in the sun before going into the kilns. These sun-drying molds, Mr. Criss saw with much awe on his first trip to the "big city."

Other early industries recalled by the Terre Haute resident included the Jinx Hominy Mill and Elevator at First and Poplar streets. Third and Main street was the site of the George Krietenstein Drug Store and Paint Shop, forerunner of the present Krietenstein firm located at Fourth and Cherry streets, and the C. C. Smith Hardware, forerunner of the present Smith's Hardware at Third street and Wabash avenue.

Mode of Transportation.

There was no paving even heard of in the Terre Haute of those days and only a few boards were seen occasionally to resemble a sidewalk. Mud was the condition of Main street, too, and the only semblance of a taxi was a little donkey cart with a peak capacity of perhaps six or eight persons.

Mr. Criss remembered that the alley between Fourth and Fifth streets was traversed by means of a bridge suspended over the muddy street, knee-deep in places.

Place of Culture.

Wabash avenue in those days was a street of many vacant lots. No more than a half-dozen two-story buildings had been built at that time and the Prairie House at Seventh and Main streets, forerunner of the modern day Terre Haute House was, itself, merely a two-story structure.

He recalled the only place of amusement in the city then was the Naylor Opera House, located at Fourth and Main streets. About every four or five months a travelling opera company would present a production from the second floor theatre. The ground level of the building was occupied by a grocery store. Those were the days when Harriett Beecher Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was just gotten a good start in the literary world.

When questioned about the river traffic, Mr. Criss told of large steamboats navigating the Wabash down the Mississippi to New Orleans, transporting corn and other farm commodities between the two points. The local landing at the west end of Ohio street was the destination of all deep south shipping to the north and Terre Haute was a bustling mecca of outgoing and incoming cargos.

Mf. Criss recalled the boats driven by paddle wheel and the many excursions enjoyed on river boats in his early youth in Terre Haute. In those days, overland traffic coming into Indiana from Illinois crossed a covered bridge that stood where the present modern bridge structure is located.

Recalls Canal Traffic.

The mule - drawn barges on the Wabash and Erie Canal were also a vivid remembrance to this pioneer. Terre Haute resident. The old canal here was fed by waters spilled from the Wabash. It connected Lake Erie and the Wabash River for transporting of lake shipping to Terre Haute and ultimately into the south. It was not a part of the Albany-to-Buffalo Erie Canal in New York.

Mr. Criss visited the mechanical departments of the Terre Haute Tribune-Star this week.

Source of pride with him, is his association with one of Terre Haute's earliest newspapers, the Morning Express, in later years absorbed in the Tribune. Living near Editor Ed Allen in the neighborhood of Sixth-and-One-half and Chestnut streets, Mr. Criss secured a position on the morning publication at the age of 10. It took two men 10 hours daily to publish a four-page paper, Monday through Saturday.

His job was selling papers over the counter for which he received $1 a week. He reported for work at 2 a.m. and worked until 9 a.m. The circulation of approximately 3,000 was sold at one cent per copy at the office or two cents on the street.

Weekly subscriptions were sold at ten cents per week and no house - to - house deliveries were made. A post-office type, pigeonhole system was used with the subscriber calling at the newspaper office for his daily paper.

Subscriptions by mail were sent only as far as the railroad stops in the various towns and rural areas. These were mailed only once each week and contained a resume of the most important news of the previous six editions. Often, the people were required to walk several miles to secure their weekly newspaper.

Voicing his interest in seeing the composing rooms of the Tribune-Star, Mr. Criss stated that their newspaper had "some" electricity in those early days. A dynamo within the plant provided electricity for four lights strung above the heads of the typesetters who had the laborious task of hand-setting every line of type, letter by letter. These were the days following the Civil War and the candle and the kerosene lamp were very much the order of the day.

Married In 1895.

Mr. Criss very proudly stated that he had lived in his present dwelling since the beginning of his married life. In 1895 he married Sarah Warren Criss who died in 1938. They were the parents of nine children, four boys and five girls: William Carl Criss, retired Army Air Corps major and veteran of World Wars I and II now residing in Walla Walla, Wash.; Thomas D. Criss, of California; Mrs. Janie Ray, R. R. 4; Mrs. Gladys Williams, Thirteenth street and Margaret avenue; Mrs. Mary Creasey, 711 South Twenty-fourth street, and Mrs. Pearl Rector, of Chicago Heights. Two sons are deceased.

Mr. Criss is very proud of his ability to maintain his own residence at such an advanced age. His large, well-cultivated garden might well be the envy of any young, able-bodied man and his many thriving flowers show the result of an experienced, green-thumb husbandman.

In 1947, Mr. Criss married Mrs. Jennie Claypool Criss and he plans to continue his home on the Riley Road as long as good health continues to be granted him.

The Terre Haute Tribune-Star 6

WILLIAM CRISS, 82-year-old resident of R. R. 4, Terre Haute, has been boosting Terre Haute, man and boy, for more than 60 years. He maintains, most expertly, the home in which he and his wife, now deceased, went to housekeeping 61 years ago. An abundance of flowers and gardening in the well-kept lawn, attest to Mr. Criss' happiness in just "being at home in Terre Haute."
